How to Use This Kit

Five working documents, from "am I allowed to do this?" to the record that proves the build.

Alaska is the easiest state in the country to get permission to build your own house, and the hardest one to prove you built it properly. There is no statewide residential building code, and over most of its land area no building department, no plan review, and no inspector who will ever see your work.

So this kit answers a question the Lower 48 never has to ask: what still binds me when nobody is checking? Not "nothing" — a short stack of state rules reaches your house whether or not an official visits it, one of them a criminal statute covering every dwelling unit in Alaska. A second arrives through your lender and your utility. Both are cited here.

WHAT IS IN THE KIT

The five documents

	Document	What it does for you
AK.1	Owner-Builder Exemption Walkthrough	Which of the two exemptions you qualify under, the trade exclusions, and the two-year rules. Read this first.
AK.2	Permit Application Checklist	What to gather on both paths — the local-permit one, and the no-building-department one where the gates are elsewhere.
AK.3	Inspection Sequence	The order inspections happen in where a code is enforced — and the self-verification record to keep where none is.
AK.4	Where to File Directory	Whether your parcel has a building authority at all, and the offices that apply even when it does not.
AK.5	Forms & Documents Index	Each document you will meet: what it is, when, and from where.

HOW TO USE IT

- Start with AK.1. A new house and a remodel come under different paragraphs, with different conditions.
- Then do AK.4. Establish whether any government reviews your house at all. Both answers are common here.
- Work AK.2 with a pen. Off the permit path, nobody hands you a checklist.
- Keep AK.3 on the job. That record stands in for the certificate you may never get.

How these facts were checked — and what this is not

Every Alaska claim here was read against its primary source in August 2026 — the Alaska Statutes, the Administrative Code, and the agencies' own pages — and is cited where it appears. Not legal advice.
